National Coastwatch Institution (NCI)

Recently one of the volunteers at NCI spoke to sailors at our marina, and found very few were aware of the organisation or channel 65. NCI locally are based at Newhaven and Shoreham and are able to supply local information and radio checks. You can get weather, tide or other local information or a radio check by calling NCI on VHF 65 - the dedicated VHF channel for Coastwatch from 8:00 to 8:00 pm (or sunset if earlier)

EYES ALONG THE COAST

VHF Channel Your first call for:

65

- Radio & AIS checks
- Local tidal conditions
- Current local weather
- Local coastal information

Currently 56 NCI stations are operational and manned by over 2500 volunteers keeping watch around the British Isles from Rossall Point in the North West, through Wales, to the South and East of England to Hornsea in the East Riding of Yorkshire.

NCI Watchkeepers are the eyes and ears along the coast, keeping a visual watch, monitoring radio channels and providing a listening watch in poor visibility. They remain vigilant at all times. Surveillance work is mainly routine but watchkeepers are trained to act in an emergency, report to the Maritime Coastguard Agency and, if required, co-ordinate with the search and rescue services.

A log of all water-based activities is kept during each watch and, when requested, weather conditions can be passed to yachtsmen and fishermen before they put to sea. Also with the new generation of web cams they can identify sea conditions for those who wish to check on the weather or sea state prior to doing any watersport activity, hopefully reducing the need for HM Coastguard response and RNLI callouts. During each watch other activities such as canoeing and diving etc are closely observed, as are bathers, walkers and climbers who use the shoreline.

Dolphins visited Club Class one Autumn !

Club Class Autumn 2019

Our twice yearly yacht racing experience will be happening again soon. From September 14th there will be 5 Saturday morning sessions where our skippers bring their boats and crews along to give new members experience on boats from our racing fleet. Many new members get into racing this way; others enjoy the sailing experience and opt to take part in cruising. Some buy their own boats and welcome others on board to sail.

Many of our club classers join up with us having heard about it from current members... for more information, go to bmyc.uk/clubclass.
